THE SOUTH-CAROLINA AND COUNTRY GAZETTE; JOURNAL.

Containing the freſheſt Advices, both Foreign and Domeſtic.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1771.

From the CRAFTSMAN; or SAY'S WEEKLY JOURNAL, of September 21, 1771.

To the PRINTER.

THE friends of Miniſtry attempt to ridicule the threats of Britain. They call him a madman. They think it abſurd, that any one ſhould imagine one or two of the great men in power capable of having an hand in ſetting fire to our principal dock-yard. I do not ſuppoſe that any of them were abſolutely privy to it; but it is not from any idea I entertain of their regard for our intereſt and power, that I acquit them of having deputed incendiaries, but becauſe the riſk they muſt have run of being diſcovered was ſuch, that I cannot allow them the merit of poſſeſſing ſpirit enough to dare to accompliſh ſo capital a ſtroke of Tory policy. The Miniſtry are as culpable as if they had directed the conflagration. They inſtantly betrayed a deſire to conceal the perpetrators of that deſtructive act, by offering a reward ſo inadequate to the loſs ſuſtained; and ſo trifling, when compared to the dreadful tendency of that mode of attack on the vital ſource of our ſtrength.

If the Miniſtry had been ſincere in their regard for our national welfare, and really anxious to bring the authors of our calamity to juſtice, they would have ſhewn the world how dangerous it would "be in future to attempt a repetition, by ſparing no ſum, nor any trouble in forwarding a diſcovery:" The reward ought to have remained open, till the general conflagration burnt the paper that publiſhed it.

Inſtead of a ſpirited ſearch, did they not languidly offer only one thouſand pounds? And, to prevent even that pittance having any ſalutary effect, did they not limit the continuance of that reward's being open, to the ſhort date of only three months? For what purpoſe endeavour to throw a ſhade over the villains who ſo materially injured us, if the Miniſtry were not, for ſome reaſon or other, afraid to have that tranſaction dragged forward into day-light? The moſt that can be ſaid for them is, that they were more afraid to have the French and Spaniards, or either of them, convicted of their treachery, than deſirous of preſerving our navy from ruin. Proving them the incendiaries would deprive our tame Miniſters of every ſhadow of excuſe to preſerve peace; and they would infinitely have our docks on fire every ſeven years, than be interrupted by a war in their plan of introducing arbitrary power, and of rioting on the ſpoils of the Treaſury. They know that their notorious incapacity to direct a war with vigour would expoſe them to ſuch open and univerſal deriſion, that even the King's unhappy partiality, and the bought approbation of a corrupted Parliament, would prove inſufficient to ſhield them from the fury of an enraged people.

With this clue we may unravel the baleful, diſgraceful politics of this reign. The laſt peace, the Spaniſh convention, the allowing France to conquer Corſica, the limitation relative to Portſmouth fire, &c. &c. all were conformable to Tory views; all had peace for their object, though at the price of an unavoidable war as the inſeparable conſequence. If the war can by any means be delayed for a year or two, no matter what conceſſions purchaſe that truce! No matter what injuries are the fruits of it! Or what infamy it entails on our name! It anſwers their purpoſe; enables them to keep the keys of the Treaſury till the general election, in order to throw its thouſands into the four winds; and, through the venality of the people, ſecure themſelves a majority in the next Houſe of Commons, to rivet the fetters forged by this Parliament.

If Britain is an impoſtor, why do not they bring him to an open trial? Why do not they publiſh his depoſitions in the Gazette, as taken by the Under Secretaries? He dares them to a Court of Juſtice. In my opinion, their inactivity in the purſuit of the incendiaries is tantamount to being accomplices in the guilt. Thoſe who wiſh to ſcreen the authors of this fire from detection, on the ſame principles would have aſſiſted in the burning of our ſtores, if their fears would have allowed them. Concealment in the preſent caſe is being an acceſſary in future---for an indefatigable ſearch, and high rewards, would have effectually deterred all future attempts, by making an eſcape more difficult. The Miniſtry may affect to laugh at the improbability of their being in the plot---but the people are not ſo blind, as to be eaſily led to acquit them of concealing the incendiaries----and, in ſuch crimes, not only the inſtigators, but even the concealers, are principals.

BRUNSWICK.

P. S. To what a depth muſt the Miniſtry have ſunk in the eſteem of the nation, to give any ſort of countenance to ſuch a report to their prejudice!----If our "beſt of Princes" was as tenacious of the honour of his Miniſters, as Julius Cæſar was of that of his wife, he would think that their integrity ought to be as delicately ſenſitive, and no more queſtioned than her chaſtity ---and he would of courſe diſmiſs them, as Cæſar did his wife---merely becauſe ſuſpected of ſuch infamy. Our "amiable Monarch" and the Roman had not the ſame ſtrict ideas of rectitude. Our "pious King" is leſs tenacious of the character of his Miniſters, than an heathen was of that of his wife! "Tell it not in, &c."

To the [illegible]

Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the faults I see;
That mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me! POPE.

OF all the vices which men are liable to, from the depravity of human nature, I think Revenge is the moſt abject and deteſtable; for, however miſtaken mortals may blazon its pedigree, it is certainly the offspring of Cowardice and Pride. Our divine Lawgiver informs us, that true magnanimity conſiſts, not in revenging injuries, but in doing good to our enemies; indeed, forgiveneſs and mercy are the genuine characteriſtics of truly great and noble minds.

Beſides the godlike pleaſure of returning good for evil, Prudence frequently requires us to check our reſentments, and even to repay offences with benefits, by doing which, we may convert powerful enemies into true and faithful friends.

When Cinna's plot, to murder Auguſtus, was diſcovered, Auguſtus ſent for him privately, and after enumerating the many favours which he had beſtowed upon him, reproached him for his diabolical diſpoſition, in ſeeking the deſtruction of his friend and benefactor. "However, ſays he, I pardon you, and this ſhall be the laſt reproach I'll give you. For the time to come, there ſhall be no other contention betwixt you and me, than which ſhall outdo the other in point of friendſhip." After this Auguſtus made Cinna Conſul; and he was, ever after, faithful and juſt to his Imperial Maſter, and at his death made him his ſole heir;---Such were the happy conſequences of Cæſar's clemency:---For a man to retaliate injuries, or ſeek Revenge, is to put himſelf upon a level with the meaneſt of the brute creation; but to diſtinguiſh himſelf by acts of mercy and forgiveneſs, ſhews his alliance to divine Perfection.

When Zeno, the Philoſopher, was told that his enemies reported him to be covetous, baſe and treacherous, calmly replied, "I will endeavour to live ſo, that the world ſhall not believe them."

The revengeful man carries his hell continually about with him; he is never at eaſe, but, on the contrary, is in continual anguiſh and excruciating pain: The diſorder is an eating canker at his heart, which (as Prometheus was treated of old) inceſſantly preys upon his vitals.

A Philoſopher of high rank in the republic of Letters, ſays, "If I were to deſcribe Revenge, I would draw a tiger bathed in blood; ſharp ſet, and ready to take a leap at his prey; or dreſs it up as the poets repreſent the furies, with whips, ſnakes and flames: It ſhould likewiſe be four, livid, full of ſcars, and wallowing in gore, raging up and down, deſtroying, grinning, bellowing, and purſuing; ſick of all other things, and moſt of all, of itſelf."

Let us change the hideous proſpect, and view the merciful man. Lo! what ſerenity and cheerfulneſs in his looks! Whilſt the revengeful man is involved in continual ſtorms and tempeſts, he enjoys a perpetual calm. You ſee benevolence ſeated on his brow; he ſquares his actions by the dictates of reaſon and humanity; by which he draws to himſelf the love and admiration of mankind: A peaceful conſcience, honeſt thoughts, and virtuous actions, afford him a never-failing fund of comfort and happineſs.---The moderation of Antigonus is highly worthy of being recorded. Some of his ſoldiers were railing at him one night, where there was but a hanging betwixt them: Antigonus overheard them, and putting the hanging gently aſide; "Soldiers, ſays he, ſtand a little farther off, for fear the King ſhould hear you." How gentle and forgiving! Yet he neither wanted a cauſe for diſpleaſure, nor the power of revenge. In ſhort, it is a ſure argument of a noble and elevated mind, not to retaliate injuries but to forgive them: For, admitting that a man is loaded with calumnies and reproaches, they are but momentary inconveniences, and therefore a wiſe man will bear them with patience and reſolution: Beſides, an injury overlooked with ſilent contempt, loſes its power againſt the perſon aimed at, and recoils upon him who offers it; ſo that he is ſufficiently puniſhed for the injury he intended.

POLITICAL MAXIMS.

THEOPOMPUS being aſked what he thought the ſureſt means by which a King might preſerve his Crown? ſaid, never to put too great a truſt in any one man, to give freedom of ſpeech to all, and to make uſe of his power to keep his ſubjects from oppreſſion: how exact does his opinion tally with that of the preſent Engliſh?

Ageſicles, King of Lacedemonia, being aſked by a foreigner, how he durſt truſt himſelf without guards, as he frequently did? becauſe all my people look on me as their father, and take an intereſt in my life: how happy muſt ſuch a Monarch be! how happy his ſubjects!

The Emperors Theodoſius, Julianus, and Conſtantine, were beloved by their ſubjects for nothing ſo much as their eaſineſs of acceſs, and the readineſs with which they liſtened to all addreſſes, of what nature ſoever: how amiable ſuch Princes.

Diviſion among the inhabitants of a country, or denizens of a city, is greatly pernicious; it is of infinitely worſe conſequence than can poſſibly be apprehended: nor do I think our enemies can wiſh, or the wrath of Heaven ſend down a more deſtructive miſchief. Is there a war ſo dangerous---a plague ſo cruel? It is weakening ourſelves, giving force to our adverſaries, opening them the gates, and putting the victory in their hands.

While the Greeks were diſputing among themſelves who ſhould be chief, Philip privately encouraged each competitor, aſſiſting the one againſt the other, till weakened by their home-bred jars they became an eaſy prey to foreign force.

The Romans were never unhappy till there grew diviſions among themſelves, and were unconquerable when in amity with each other, which occaſioned the proverb, A Roman only could ſubdue a Roman.

On TRUE PATRIOTISM.

THERE is a diſpoſition of mind called public ſpirit, or the love of our country, which good men in all ages have exerted; which prudent men have encouraged by endeavouring to make it faſhionable and honourable; which ingenious men have conſecrated to immortality by their praiſes of it; which few men, how profligate ſoever, have had the impudence to cenſure openly; which ridicule, that ſpares nothing, hath been almoſt afraid to attack; which in our country hath been much talked of, and ſeldom found.

A Patriot is a religious man, who employs himſelf in ſerving the public; and a good citizen is one who loves God and his neighbour. Whoſoever neglects his duty to God, cannot perform his duty to the public in a complete and effectual manner. A Patriot without religion, and an honeſt man without the fear of God, is one of the moſt uncommon creatures upon earth; and unhappy are the people who have nothing better to truſt to, than the honour of ſuch counſellors and magiſtrates. Let revenge, ambition, pride, luſt, or profit tempt the man to a baſe and vile action, and you may as well think to bind an hungry tiger with a cob-web, as to hold this debauched patriot in the viſionary chains of decency, or to charm him with the intellectual beauty of truth and reaſon.

PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 21.

On Friday laſt the principal MERCHANTS of this City made an elegant entertainment for the GOVERNOR, at the State-Houſe, to which all the Clergy, military gentlemen, and ſtrangers, as well as the Public Officers, and other perſons of diſtinction in the city were invited. After dinner many loyal and patriotic toaſts were drank, attended with the diſcharge of 21 pieces of cannon.---The general harmony and good order, that prevailed in ſo large a company, which conſiſted of upwards of Three Hundred and Fifty Perſons, did honour to themſelves, and to the gentlemen who conducted the entertainment, and every countenance gave the higheſt proof of the cordial pleaſure that was felt on the occaſion. At half an hour paſt two, the Merchants waited upon the GOVERNOR, in order to conduct him to the State-Houſe, when they took the opportunity of preſenting him with the following ADDRESS.---

To the Honourable RICHARD PENN, Eſq; Lieutenant-Governor and Commander in Chief of the Province of Pennſylvania, and Counties of Newcaſtle, Kent, and Suſſex, on Delaware.

SIR,

THE MERCHANTS of PHILADELPHIA beg leave to expreſs their ſatisfaction in your appointment to the government of this province, and to congratulate you on your ſafe arrival.

Senſible of the good effects derived to ſociety from a well regulated commerce; and of its extenſive and beneficial influence in this province, we cannot doubt, that under your government, the trade of Philadelphia will be favoured with every neceſſary encouragement.

Our knowledge of your private character, and the univerſal prepoſſeſſion of the inhabitants of Pennſylvania in favour of your adminiſtration, give us the beſt aſſurance, that in every public meaſure you will be directed by the principles of juſtice and equity: And that your government will prove eaſy to yourſelf, agreeable and happy to the people under your care: And, with much ſincerity, we aſſure you, the Merchants of this city will neglect no means that can poſſibly contribute to that deſirable event.

THE GOVERNOR's ANSWER.

GENTLEMEN,

THE ſatisfaction you expreſs upon my appointment to the Government, and the congratulations you offer upon my ſafe arrival among you, cannot but afford me a very ſenſible pleaſure, as they give me reaſon to indulge myſelf in the agreeable expectations of living happily in a country, to which I am very ſincerely and warmly attached.

Thoſe prepoſſeſſions in my favour, which you have ſo kindly entertained, as they are highly flattering to me, ſo will they very naturally render me ſolicitous to merit and juſtify them.

I have ever conſidered the Merchants of this city, as the moſt reſpectable and independent claſs of people; and, they may reſt aſſured, that, whenever I may have the power, I ſhall not want the inclination to ſupport their particular intereſts.

I am already greatly indebted to their kindneſs and hoſpitality, and I heartily wiſh, that I may hereafter ſucceed in cultivating ſuch a ſocial intercourſe as may ſecure me a continuance of their favourable ſentiments.

Capt. Thompſon, from Jamaica, informs, that a number of veſſels belonging to Montego Bay, in Jamaica, which have for ſome time paſt followed the practice of cutting wood on Cuba, were ſurprized by a Spaniſh brig, fitted out for that purpoſe, who made prizes of 17 ſloops and ſchooners.
